

High-performance fireproof cable trays

AI Overview

High-efficiency fire-resistant cable trays combine fire protection, structural strength, and heat management to ensure safe and reliable cable routing in high-risk environments.

Key Features

- Fire Resistance: Modern cable trays use intumescent coatings, fireproof paints, or thermosetting resin composites to form insulating char layers under high temperatures, preventing flame spread and protecting cables from heat damage (DAKEN, NewReach, LONGJOY). They are tested against hydrocarbon fires, jet fires, and standard cellulosic fires, meeting standards like UL 1709, ISO 834, and BS 476.
- Material Options:
  - Steel: Fire-coated or galvanized steel trays provide high load-bearing capacity and structural stability but require coatings for fire protection.
  - FRP (Fiber-Reinforced Plastic): Lightweight, corrosion-resistant, and non-conductive, FRP trays with thermosetting resins offer excellent fire retardancy and are ideal for offshore, chemical, and industrial environments.
  - Composite Trays: Flame-retardant polymer composites combine fire resistance with durability and flexibility for complex layouts.
- Ventilation and Heat Management: High-efficiency trays often feature perforated or ventilated designs to dissipate heat under normal operation, reducing cable aging and maintaining system reliability.
- Structural Strength: Reinforced internal plates or ladder-type designs support long spans, heavy cable loads, and elevated installations, resisting vibration, wind, and harsh environmental conditions.
- Environmental Adaptability: These trays are suitable for indoor, outdoor, offshore, and marine applications, with resistance to chemicals, UV, and extreme weather.

Applications

- Industrial Facilities: Petrochemical plants, LNG facilities, oil & gas processing areas, and power plants.
- Critical Infrastructure: Data centers, hospitals, high-rise buildings, and nuclear power facilities where fire safety is paramount.
- Offshore Platforms and Vessels: FRP and coated steel trays provide corrosion resistance and fire protection in marine environments.
