

High-quality mesh cable tray accessories

AI Overview

Mesh cable tray accessories include connectors, supports, covers, bends, tees, crosses, risers, reducers, and mounting hardware to ensure secure and flexible cable management.

Common Types of Mesh Cable Tray Accessories

- Connectors and Splices
 - Straight connectors: Join two tray sections in a straight line for continuous cable routing.
 - Clamp connectors: Secure trays after bending or for straight connections.
 - Couplers and splicers: Boltless or bolted systems to connect straight sections or bottom trays.
 - T and cross connectors: Enable branching of cable trays at intersections.
- Directional and Structural Fittings
 - Elbows and bends: Change the direction of cable trays horizontally or vertically.
 - Tees and crosses: Allow multiple tray paths to intersect.
 - Risers and reducers: Adjust tray height or width to accommodate different cable loads.
- Support and Mounting Accessories
 - Hanging clamps and bars: Suspend trays from ceilings or structures using threaded rods.
 - Supporting brackets and cross arms: Provide additional stability and load distribution.
 - Bases and suspension rods: Secure trays to walls, floors, or ceilings.
- Protective and Organizational Accessories
 - Covers: Protect cables from dust, debris, or mechanical damage.
 - Separating strips and system dividers: Organize different cable types within the same tray.
 - Cable cleats and protective rings: Prevent cable movement and reduce stress at bends or exits.
 - Drop outs: Relieve stress on cables as they exit the tray.
- Materials and Construction

Accessories are commonly made from galvanized steel, stainless steel (SS304, SS316, SS316L), aluminum alloy, EZ steel, HDG steel, or PC steel. Components typically include top and bottom bars, M6 bolts, nuts, and other fasteners for secure installation.
- Customization Options

Many manufacturers offer custom-designed accessories to meet specific project requirements, including unique bends, widths, or mounting configurations. Mesh cable tray accessories are essential for creating a flexible, stable, and organized ca...
