

Tools needed for fiber optic cable stripping

AI Overview

Fiber optic cable stripping requires specialized tools such as mechanical strippers, cutting scissors, buffer strippers, and multi-purpose stripping kits to safely remove coatings and jackets without damaging the fiber. Mechanical Fiber

Strippers Mechanical strippers are the most common tools for removing polymer coatings from optical fibers. They feature precision slots sized for specific fiber diameters (typically 125 μm glass with 250 μm coating) and allow technicians to strip a defined length of coating cleanly without nicking the glass. These strippers are often handheld and can be used for standard telecommunication fibers, specialty thin fibers, or plastic optical fibers (POF). Fiber Cable Cutting Scissors Specialized scissors, such as the CFS-2 fiber cable cutting scissors, combine cutting and stripping functions. They use segmented holes to strip different layers, including the primary coating, secondary coating, or outer sheath, and can handle fibers ranging from 125 μm to 900 μm . These scissors are lightweight, portable, and designed for quick, accurate stripping. Buffer and Jacket Stripping Tools Buffer strippers remove the protective buffer layer from fibers in preparation for connectorization. Tools like Thorlabs' fiber buffer stripping kits include matched blades and fiber guides to ensure precise stripping, often color-coded for different fiber types. Larger cable jackets can be removed using tools like Jonard's CST-4000, which allows longitudinal, spiral, or circular cuts for end or mid-span stripping. Multi-Purpose Stripping

Kits Comprehensive kits, such as the TSK1 fiber stripping kit, include multiple blade sets, fiber guides, and jacket strippers in a compact case. These kits are designed to handle a variety of fiber diameters and coating types, providing flexibility for both single-mode and multimode fibers. Key Considerations Fiber type and diameter: Ens...
